

DOES YOUR CHILD NEED BETTER STUDY SKILLS?

If your child is an athlete, they practice skills and drills.
If they want to become a great artist, they practice technique.
But if they want to be a great student...
HOW DO THEY LEARN HOW TO STUDY?

SIGNS THAT YOU MAY NOT NEED A “SUBJECT TUTOR”, BUT INSTEAD, IMPROVED “PROCESS OR STUDY SKILLS”

Is your child showing signs of stress due to their homework (or homework load)?

Does your child have a hard time getting started on their work?

Does your child avoid work?

Does your child not turn in their work?

Does your child know how to plan for long-term assignments?

Does your child know how to take notes?

Does your child know how to use their notes to study?

Does your child have anxiety during tests and therefore not do their best?

Are your child’s grades inconsistent?

Does your child rush through their work?

Does your child avoid discussing homework, even if they are struggling?

Does your child rush through homework or shut down if they don’t get it “fast”?

Is your child ever surprised by a bad grade on a test?

Is your child ever surprised by missing work?

Bottom line: Most students are never taught a “system” to learn how to study. The StudyPro teaches students how to organize their time and work, how to manage longer-term assignments, how to take and use notes, and how to effectively study for a test.

If students have never been taught how to study, how can we expect them to master these skills?
